We are problem solvers: we use our skills as architects to help you achieve your project ambitions. We enjoy what we do: we like getting to know our clients, understanding their needs and what inspires them. We listen carefully to what you tell us you want and work with you to create buildings and spaces that reflect your aspirations.

The practice is known for its interest in and understanding of energy efficient construction and renewable energy technologies. We are imaginative, open and thorough in the way we work. We offer creative design solutions on a wide range of projects and are always open to new challenges.

Pamela Charlick and Natasha Nicholson lead the practice. As experienced designers we will guide you through the process of obtaining statutory approvals, meeting regulatory requirements, and the construction phase of the project. We have well-established relationships with other construction professionals and can bring together teams to suit your project requirements. Based in London and the West Country we are well placed to undertake projects in town and country.

Best Change of Use of an Existing Building or Conversion

The Project

A conversion of three redundant stone-walled agricultural buildings to two new energy-efficient homes on a Grade II listed site in South Gloucestershire. The Stone Barn (425m²) is a five bedroom farmhouse for the client's use. The adjoining Stables (175m²) is a three bedroom development for rental. The new-build Biomass Shed (110m²) contains woodchip boilers serving five buildings via a local heat main, and has a PV solar array.
